Creating good basis for social integration

To come to a new city, a new country, a new culture also comes with a host of new challenges; Acquiring a good grasp of the language is emphasis from day one, then using it to integrate oneself into the society both on a professional and personal level, using the language to create new networks, getting life and family matters balanced positive and productive in ones´ new environs.

The sole focus for us in Hemkunskapen is to ensure that we do our part in creating a good start for our tenants in their new host country, that they understand the standards and expectations that come with rental agreements and that they receive all pertinent information to the smallest detail to ensure they feel confident and competent in day to day living their new home.

Despite being in a business sector that is essentially about the physical leasing and maintenance of tangible product, we also recognize that an apartment is just an apartment standing as a shell but it becomes a home only when someone lives there. Believing firmly in the importance of social engagement with our tenants, we strive to create personable relationships. This is why Hemkunskapen works for the most part with face to face meetings, through visits at home, or meetings or gatherings within the local community, where we convey specifically tailored information designed to make the company/customer relationship as simple and positive as possible. With each visit we take the tenant through all rights and obligations both from the individual and the company´s perspectives in in order to ensure a seamless experience for our tenants where they feel they can live in an harmonious balance with themselves and others in their local neighborhood.
